Most people will answer romantic love. The love we all hope to find, the happy ending to every love story when watching movies or reading books. Of course, when you take another second, the love you feel for a family member will come to mind next. Does love in general come from the same source, or can we categorize different kinds of love? And which factor leads to which kind of love? Psychologist John Allen Lee used several Greek words for love to portray the different kinds we come across. They are forgiving to themselves and others and can easily find joy and delight. Which kinds of love can you think of that have not been mentioned here? If you can think of any you are more than welcome to write about them in the comment section.
